

Coronavirus: Our steps to reduce the impact on your matter

Taylor&Emmet LLP
SOLICITORS

Over the last few weeks the staff and partners at Taylor&Emmet have been working incredibly hard to prepare for the possible 'lock-down' of businesses due to the coronavirus pandemic and to minimise the impact on clients. Whilst there are many uncertainties at this stage it is clear that, for the moment, normal life for many is on hold. This is affecting businesses across the country and across all business sectors. Taylor&Emmet is not immune from this.

We are committed to taking responsible and proportionate precautions in line with Government advice and recommendations to help prevent the spread of Coronavirus and to protect our employees and our clients. Whilst we have endeavoured to maintain, as far as possible, a normal service, it is clear that from a practical point of view many matters are unlikely to proceed normally during the 'lock-down' period.

As a result of the Government 'lock-down' we will be physically closing our offices. We will still be operating our full range of services remotely. Our solicitors are all equipped to continue working from home and we will continue to progress and deal with your matter throughout the 'lock-down' period.

You can continue to contact your solicitor via their direct dial telephone number or e-mail address. It is impossible to say how your matter might be impacted from a timing point of view as a result of the 'lock-down'.

We will continue to monitor the situation closely and review our practices and procedures to ensure that our normal physical service can be resumed as quickly as possible. If you have any particular concerns please do not hesitate to speak to the solicitor looking after your matter.
